Provide any comments you have on what you learned about valuing yourself and working ethically with others in a diverse population.

I really wouldn't credit the school for any of that.

I learned a lot about myself when I returned to WTC for my accounting degree. Mostly what I learned is that I am a very dedicated and hard working student. I pride myself on completing great work, and also on the grades I earn. Bringing all of this into play while working with others, I can appreciate what I do and still not fault others for not thinking the same way I do.

My education has helped my self esteem.

I have had classes with students of varied races, ethnicity, ages, cultures, and religious backgrounds and I have learned a lot about myself and them. I never worked or went to school with such a diverse population and am glad to have had a chance to be able too.

While diversity was talked about in different classes, there wasn't much personal experiences with that on campus. Goals were often encouraged for the individual in different program classes to help build up the students.

Business Management Orientation was a good class in terms of working ethically and in a diverse population. Classes I feel that were not needed, that are related to these would be Race, Class, Gender as well as team building and problem solving.

Every business management course brought up how to express ethics during your career and personal life. Many of the classes were required to work in groups which was a chance to see how to work with all different types of people.

Every group project was a learning experience.

I worked with a lot of different professors and students, so I was able to learn how many other people teach and learn!

I always knew the value of working hard and never quitting till the job was done but this reminded me that I knew how.

I have interacted with others from all walks of life

To work hard

I learned to respect other peoples diversity.

With the classes provided I feel I learned more about myself and the diversities near and far.

This is one thing that was stressed in our program and I really enjoyed learning about it.

This was a huge focus of the program. I have learned a lot and hopefully become a better teacher because of all of the anti bias curriculum that we were taught.

Coming into the program I was shy and never really like to branch out, but I feel like after a year of being together we all started to feed off of each other and figure out that if we talk to each other and become friends, things would be much easier. Especially because of all the projects within the second year.

Not very diverse

The teamwork in this program has improved all of our conversation skills and way of working

I have found that I can learn new things. I also have found it interesting to see how people with different backgrounds handle the same issues. I have found strength in some of my class mates and vice versa.

I have learned that I'm smarter then I thought I was and I found it interesting to see how people with different backgrounds handled the same issues

As a Human Service student the first thing you learn is how to care for yourself first. Self care is again so important in our field, as one cannot care for others until they learn to care for themselves. We were given the tools to do this and were given many opportunities to share what we learned and what we do to care for ourselves.

Ethics, personal values and diversity are highly promoted as well as not judging our own opinions and values.

Really enjoyed cultural issues.

I didn't think I was capable of much before this program. Now, I am very confident in my abilities as a person, mother, and a helper. I know going into things that I am smart and my knowledge will show itself in my work. I know the things to look for as far as ethics are concerned, and have already been able to put that into use.

I have learned to take care of myself and to make time for myself to keep me healthy. Also to keep me going and I have learned that everyone has a different background. Sometimes there decisions do not make sense to us, but the reason they chose that was because of there culture.

Throughout the program I learned about other populations and had the chance to get experience working with them. The field experiences are a wonderful thing!

Learning to love yourself before you can help others is so huge in this field. Also, learning self care techniques is very helpful. Learning about all of the populations and diversity is also helpful.

learned a lot about diversity

What I learned about valuing myself and working ethically with others in a diverse population was the respect each other. The boundaries each individual's had.

I have made some great friendships with my classmates over the last two years and I expect that we will continue our friendships long into the future.

If I needed help learning how to "value myself" I should have gone to a shrink, not a college. What a bizarre question...

Through Xxx and Xxx, I've definitely learned a lot about navigating my way through this very new field and learning the norms and expectations of it. I learned nothing positive from Xxx Xxx, however.

Team projects and my ethics class helped out a lot.

I already didn't have a problem working in diverse populations but with taking my ethics class, it helped me to understand a lot of the concepts behind ethics that I didn't know previously.

With all of the different projects and internships that were required. We learned a lot about how to communicate with multiple personalities.

I have been working ethically with others in a diverse population for many years.

Particularly, the Ethics, Diversity and Medical Law, Ethics, and Professionalism classes have given me the tools to perform this trait.

It is important to be patient and understanding with a variety of people.

Working in family practice I get all kinds of different people, and I learned to talk so they understand me not talk down to them but make sure they understand what I am trying to say

This is me in general and other careers I've had in the past.

I love working with others but I also love working by myself and having that one on one feel with each patient.

I have learned to value the limited time given to learn hands on as much as I can.

Have found it easy and enjoyable to work with a variety of people - every group and individual holds interest.

The integrity and trust that goes along with being a nurse has been emphasized in teaching. I feel proud to be going into nursing, and I feel accomplished that I have made it through this challenging and rewarding program.

With all of the different clinical experiences that I have gotten I feel like I have cared for a diverse population.

This program has helped me realize my intellectual capabilities and how I can accomplish tasks that I set out to do! I take immense pride in getting through the ups and downs of this program. I have been able to look past certain circumstances of a patient's situation that I may not agree with and give them the holistic care that they need. It can be hard not to judge but this program has allowed me the skills to remain focused on the bigger picture and to remain professional.

Nursing especially is an ethical profession, this program put a good amount of emphasis on being ethical and being open to diverse populations.

Working with real patients was very useful to learn these values.

I have been exposed to many different situations, people, and environments which has greatly impacted how I will practice as an RN.

clinical was great for this

I think the program does a nice job of teaching students to be ethically and morally driven individuals.

Community service learning and fieldwork experiences exposed me to diverse populations.

I learned that I can be comfortable in a diverse population.

Learned how to choose ethically appropriate treatments for clients

I have always been open to working with all people but never thought of the possibility of working internationally.

Learned to take care of myself and the ability to work with a diverse crowd in skills.

I have learned that it's important to value myself and what I know so that I can deliver the best care to patients. I have noticed how important it really is to respect your co workers to make sure that the patient is always receiving care that is the best for them.

We definitely deal with difficult staff all the time in healthcare, so it might be nice to touch on how to deal with these difficult situations (ie doctors, nurses, aides)

I am noticing that I am more comfortable speaking to people whether they are patients co workers management etc..

I have spent the last 40 years working ethically and with a diverse population, so coming back to school again made it easier for me to work well with my classmates and instructors. I have learned to value myself even more.

I was in the Army. I got this.
