Provide any comments you have on what you learned about incorporating the importance of sustainability in decisions you make.

Don't even know what that means.

just today i thought about whether or not it is worth it for me to take a job that's over an hour away at $16.50 an hour. i think because of my accounting education and my math skills i was able to work through that problem i was having. i had to know if taking that job would be a sustainable thing for my family budget.

I cannot remember sustainability being a subject in any of my classes at Western, but by just being a student at Western I have learned about it because it is a big part of campus life. You see it everywhere! So just by being exposed to it in this manner I have learned to incorporate in all the decisions I make.

This topic is brought into a lot of the program classes even if it is not talked about directly recycling and e-waste procedures

Prior to the business management I was not even aware about what sustainability meant, so I have learned a lot
If I own a restaurant one day this program has prepared me for that.

To do good

I have learned that when I made decisions, I need to figure out an answer I can sustain for long term if the answer holds up with new facts.

Learn how to manage resources in a lengthy operation involving a large amount of logistic planning.

This program has improved all of our abilities to make decisions and step up to leadership roles

One of the assignments we did was on the use of electronics and what happens when they are "outdated". I was amazed at how much is building up in third world countries. This has me rethinking the idea of needing to go out and get the newest thing when the old one still works.

One assignment was on the what happens with "outdated" technology. I was shocked by what I found and it has changed my thinking about having to the "newest" thing when my old electronic is still good

I totally agree with the program teaching the importance of sustainability. It is essential in the human services field.

I think this is very important to the human service program. I think shows us that we need to support and be upheld.

What I learned about incorporating the importance of sustainability in decision I make in my internship that I learned to know the reason how to give out things to individual's.

I didn't know what "sustainability" was until I took this program, so I suppose I have also learned more about making sustainability decisions.

How about some context instead of being so vague? Environmental sustainability? Economic sustainability? The sustainability of my libido? If you want a decent answer, you first need to ask a decent question.

Xxxx Xxxx and Xxxx Xxxx always emphasized and gave guidance to building systems that were sustainable and maintainable to those who come after us and also to ourselves. Both Xxxx and Xxxx were great! I cannot say enough good things about them!

I think incorporating sustainable into this program was a good thing, I didn't deal with it a lot but still beneficial to learn about.

Pretty much this course.

I'm able to contribute to work discussions and meetings due to what I've learned though this program. We are very focused on sustainability at work, so this is a valued trait.

I am able to think under pressure and if I don't know I ask someone that is near me

I have always been empathetic and compassionate but also am great at making the correct decisions that are best for my patient.

I've gotten better as organization in order to improve speed and better complete my work.

This is one of the areas that I feel we all need to work on as a society.

I feel well prepared to go out into the nursing field. My career is like a game of chess, every move needs/deserves thought before acting.

Sustainability was not mentioned once to me during the entire program. This question should not be part of the survey.

The management course contributed the most to my knowledge of incorporating sustainability.

I have definitely learned to prioritize and critical think before making any important decisions and this has really helped.

I am not feeling confident in my decision making skills quite yet.

I have more confidence in making decisions.
